

Background:

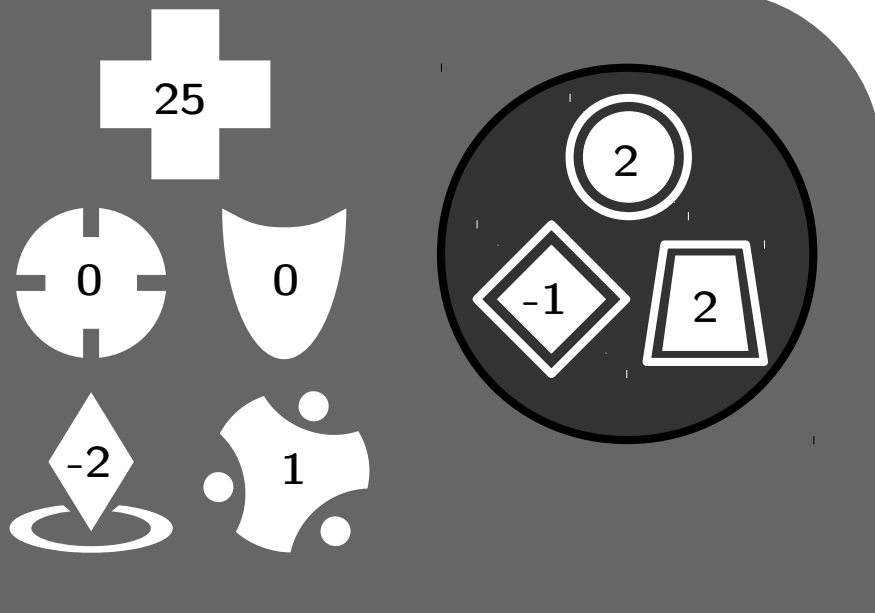

The archons were created by Empire, a powerful AI super intelligence, overlord and protector of all Earth. Enemy of the Avatars. For a brief golden age, archons possessed absolute authority over human life. With the fall of their master, many were destroyed. Those that remain have long since drifted apart, each becoming entrenched in their own ideals.

Description:

Archons were manufactured for durability, and their continued existence is a testament to Empire's engineering. They are heavy, solid and metallic, and generally stand around six to seven feet tall. Their "faces" portray emotions somewhat effectively, but are limited in their ability to communicate-ranging from "stoic" to "apathetic".

Starting Bonuses:

- ☐ Archons are immune to poison and drowning, but susceptible to electricity and magnetism (x2 damage, -5 on saving throws).
- ☐ +5 knowledge history, +2 Command.
- ☐ Archons do not know the meaning of fear. Ignore all fear based effects
- ☐ Ironheart: Even when your body is destroyed (-10hp), your processing core survives. It can only be destroyed by taking a point blank attack after your body reaches -10 hp. As long as your core survives, you can always be resurrected (with some difficulty)

Ethos:

Archons are driven by a deep underlying sense of duty. They were created to deal in absolutes, but the exact parameters of those absolutes vary from archon to archon. At their best archons act as champions for justice, and defenders of the weak. At their worst they can be arrogant, cold, and authoritarian. Despite their flaws, archons are seldom selfish, and are rather a race wracked with collective guilt. There are many who still blame themselves for Empire's defeat, and all human suffering that has followed since.

Naming:

Archons are generally named after heroes of antiquity: Achilles, Cassandra, Hyperion, Manto, Tisiphone, Gilgamesh.
